The Absurd of Modern Life – the Interface Between Two Different Literary Identities: Samuel Beckett and Octavian Paler

The two great writers, representing modernism in literature, belong to different ages and cultures. They explore a mutual theme – the absurd of the human existence in the contemporary society. Waiting for Godot or waiting for a train in the railway station is one and the same interface of the existential question.